It is estimated that each emigrant coming to this country is worth $500 on the average. On this basis immigration is now adding every year about one hundred and ninety millions of dollars in value to the productive power of the country.

The whole fisheries are becoming so unprofitable that the New Bedford ship owners intend sending out only half the usual fleet this season. The fishing vessels are about the only American ones now seen in foreign waters. Take them away and our commerce is pretty much gone.

If the Versailles people are to be believed the Commune is going to pieces very rapidly. But we can't always believe these French, not at least while the memory of their war dispatches and Gambetta's proclamations are fresh. We hope their statements are true, and that the insurgents are in the condition represented. The Central Committee which organized the Commune proposes to take its authority away, being alarmed by the threatened repetitions of the bloody scenes of '93.

Was it Dante or Bacon or old John Bunyan who told about the man who tried to bottle sun-beams? It was some old worthy or other, and he was wonderfully amused by the conceit, and pointed a high old moral with it. He would feel quite small now could he hear of the achievement of a French professor, who has contrived a vase which he fills with concentrated sunshine by exposing it for a quarter of an hour to the solar rays. It is true he can only light a candle with it by means of a lens, but may be that is only a commencement. Great things have grown out of small beginnings. We shall wait to see.

How suddenly men who have no real ability and are accidentally raised to prominence in public affairs drop out of sight and are forgotten, after having occupied the eye of the world for a season? There is Gambetta, for instance. He used to startle the world every morning before breakfast, with a proclamation of a victory gained or prospective. Sometimes he let off two or three of them, and for two or three months he was the biggest man in France. Where is he now, and what has become of him? Nobody knows, and nobody cares. There was not enough in the man to make it worth anybody's while to care. He was a blatherskite who, through circumstances, became possessed of power he did not know how to handle. The world is full of such fellows. We have thousands of them here, for they breed among republican institutions like maggots in corruption.

It is evident, even to the most careless observer, that our city is growing very rapidly, and in all probability a few years will produce such a change as few persons now conceive of. It is in a period of transition when a careful expenditure of its resources and a good use of its advantages, will be of the greatest importance to the future. There is one thing almost indispensable to a city and to which our authorities have already paid some attention, and that is the matter of public parks. We need them now, but not a tenth part as much as we shall when there are a hundred or a hundred and fifty thousand people here. For a city of this size we are tolerably well supplied with breathing grounds, but as Indianapolis grows it must also expand in this direction. There are few places of ground now within the city limits which can be used for such purposes, and we know of but one which is perfectly adapted for the purpose by reason of its situation and the growth of large trees upon it. That is the tract known as "Blake's woods," west of the Canal and north of St. Clair street. This contains several acres of high, rolling ground, well-covered with large trees, and now almost surrounded by dwellings and factories. We do not know to whom it belongs or whether it has been subdivided into lots, but it will be only a short time before it is built up, and if the city can secure it at a reasonable price, we think it would be a good thing. A park in that vicinity would be very acceptable to a large population in the northern part of the city, west of Pennsylvania street.

Local Governments.

We alluded days yesterday to the importance of a good Council to the city, and we wish to-day to enforce the suggestion. Habits clung to communities more tenaciously than to individuals. A State or nation will keep on doing what it has been used to doing, long after the motive of it has disappeared. Half the existing institutions of England are mere prolongations of old habits, the impulses to which ended centuries ago. The objections that defeated the first game and fish bill in the Legislature last winter were assertions of the habit of valuing game and fish formed a generation ago, when both were so plenty that it was more a consideration to remove than preserve them. The election of respectable noodles to the County Board, and of anybody, without regard to respectability, to the City Council, are effects of the habit established when neither had anything to do and one man was as available to do nothing as another. We do not mean that all Commissioners have been noodles or all Councilmen useless, but that we have had more of such than was good for the public welfare, and that we have any at all is due to the habit of regarding these officers as of little consequence, derived from the time when they were of little consequence. That time has long been past. At all events it is past now. These local offices concern us a good deal more than do the State offices. A good for nothing Governor can't do us half the mischief that a stupid Commissioner can, nor a quarter of the mischief that a rascally Councilman, can. The administration of one lies away off on the outside of our occupations and interests; the work of the other comes right into our houses and back yards, meddles with every step in our street walking, with every suggestion of domestic convenience, with every precaution for safety. It is as "casing as the general air." We can hardly breathe without drawing breath through a municipal strainer. We do not say that this should not be so, but we do say that as it is so we should have good men to do the meddling. Our local administrations, besides touching us more nearly than any other, cost us much more dearly than all others. We paid for 1870, $1.01 on each $100, for county purposes alone, about two and a half times as much as we paid for State purposes. We paid $1.10 on each $100 for city purposes alone, nearly three times as much as we paid for State purposes. Between the two local expenses, we paid five times as much as the State administration cost us. Now, when we put out five dollars for such appropriations for every one that goes in the other direction, it begins to look a little as if the time had come to change the habit of regarding councilmen as they were regarded when the city receipts were about $5,000, and the city expenses were summed up in repairing foot bridges and bursted hose. It is a serious matter when the tax duplicate has reached $30,000,000 and the revenue $250,000. We don't want any more "fooling" when the joke gets to be so big. The City Council ought to contain better men than the average of those who are sent to the Legislature. They have more power, certainly more power of annoyance, and, in proportion to their number, more money to manage. Many of them are better than the average of legislators, of more intelligence, wider experience, better settled integrity, but some of them are not better than the average inhabitants of a well conducted jail. And from these come pretty much all the trouble. They can be induced by one means or another to propose anything or support anything. We want no more of them. It is time to select councilmen with as much consideration as we should select agents for the management of our private business. We know very well that it won't be done; that the time will never come when blatherskites, who wouldn't be trusted with an appropriation of fifteen cents in ordinary business, can not be elected to dispose of half a million; that we shall always do more or less of the foolery of putting men in office to waste money, and then grumble at the cost they make; but by insisting on the magnitude of these local administrations, and the ease with which stupidity or rascality can make them pinch to the degree of torture, we may set some little influence of intelligence to work to counteract the habit of regarding and electing councilmen and county commissioners as we did twenty years ago, when neither had anything to do, and did it, to anything to spend or speculate upon.

What a Little Smile Can Do.

Little Nellie awoke in the morning, And called, from her own little bed, For papa and mamma to awaken, As was high time the birdies were fed.

How bright was the smile that first greeted The eyes of her loving mamma! How sweet little blue eyes were beaming, As the carols, "Good morning papa!"

Through a heart full of joy and of gladness Beams the light that descends from above; Each smile in itself is a heaven, A soul-ray of heavenly love.

It comes from the light giving fountain, Smiles out through the little child face, Extends to father and mother, Its bright path through the dwelling we trace.

The household is made the more cheerful, The charm lies throughout the whole day, Each heart is secure from the earth-touch, Its rays chase the shadows away.

Each member's a light in the world-path, The sweet influence follows each step; In beams glid with happy neighbors; What a joy a sweet smile doth best.

Let each face, then, when breatheth the morning, Adorn with its emblem of light, 'Tis a brilliant illuminates the day hours, And gildeth our day for the night.

Amadeus, the new King of Spain has found the climate of Madrid so trying to his usually robust health that he thinks he must spend the winter further south. His physicians have recommended Malaga.

A writer in the New York Mail protests against smoking on the sidewalk. Thus, little by little, is slipping away the inalienable right of every American citizen to make a hog of himself.—(Journalist.)

When a scallawag gets elected to office in the Southern States, and can't find any one to sign his official bond, he sells out his chance. The Treasurer elect of Bibb county, Georgia, is reported to have realized $800 in a little transaction of this kind lately.

Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler calls the attention of the public to the fact that the Mr. Theodore Cuyler who made the strong compromise speech in Philadelphia, just before the war, was another man altogether, "an eminent lawyer and zealous Democrat" of Philadelphia.

Brick Pomeroy and Mr. Pursey Allen Leonard are now about the only available Presidential candidates left to the Republican party. It's true that Brick Pomeroy has made more Republican votes than any man living, but then, Pursey Allen Leonard shoots his brothers-in-law.—(Courier-Journal.)

It is said that a school teacher named Kent, near Point Pleasant, Virginia, recently reprimanded one of his pupils named Sturgeon. Last Friday Sturgeon procured a club, waylaid Kent, and struck him on the back of the head, killing him instantly. The murderer has not been arrested.

The Constitutionalist, of Augusta, Georgia, indorses Mr. Memminger's remedy for the regeneration of South Carolina: The abolition of universal suffrage, and the substitution of a property and an educational qualification. And that all Southern States would improve their condition by the adoption of the same policy.

People who pretend to know, say that years ago both Grace Greenwood and Gail Hamilton "set their caps" for John G. Whittier. Grace has since got married, and Gail—well, Gail thinks all sorts of husbands are vanities now. Whittier, they say, suffered a mild stroke of love's lightning in his early days of early manhood; since then his heart has been "snow-bound."

We own that upon investigating the Posey family history, some little confusion exists with regard to dates, but still with all George Washington's fondness for floriculture, we dislike to think of him either as a sower of wild oats or a gatherer of posies. It is to be hoped this mystery will be cleared up, as in the Jewel case, or this its resurrector may be speedily strangled.—[N. O. Times.]

A few days ago we announced the death of Mr. Robert Chambers, a member of the well known firm of Williams & Robert Chambers, publishers, and now we have to record the death of Mr. David N. Chambers, the youngest member of the firm, and manager of the London establishment. Mr. Chambers was so affected on receiving the intelligence of his brother's death that a blood-vessel burst on the liver, from which he never rallied. He was in his fifty-second year.

The Downer coal oil won't blow up, nor make the darkness bluish. It is just the very best article that ever filled a lamp or saturated a wick. Frank Boyd keeps it, and sup-are not fooling about the quality, it is the best in the market. Take our hat if you can prove to the contrary. Drive down to No.

If you will step into the Eagle Clothing store, at the corner of Washington and Meridian streets, you will find that Mr. Griesheimer can sell you a most elegant suit of clothes, at a price you can not possibly find fault with. The great beauty of his goods is that they fit as well as clothes made to order, and often much better.

It is time the public should rely upon their own judgment in life insurance, and not be deceived by the misrepresentations of irresponsible agents. The public should know the character of the companies they patronize. Those that fail to fulfill their promises to policy-holders when living, will likely fail when the end comes. The National Life Insurance Company of the United States of America, fulfills every promise. Examine into it. Grubb & Paxton are the agents for

MINOR MENTION.
 The Supreme Court is in session again today.
 Section 3, Roberts Park Church gives a social to-night.
 The location of the Indianapolis Fair grounds is so definitely fixed upon this afternoon.
 Joseph Sikes got a decree of divorce from Lucy Sikes yesterday in the Superior Court.
 Palace stock cars have been introduced on the line of the Indianapolis and St. Louis Railway.

Walter Bray has been tendered and will accept a complimentary benefit at the Metropolitan on Friday evening.
 A union meeting of the teachers of Center and Wayne townships will be held in Indiana Saturday next, at half past nine a. m.
 J. M. Ridenour and T. O. Rout, of this city, were yesterday drawn as members of the United States Court jury for the May term.
 The Indianapolis Gas Light and Coke Company manufactured 5,347,900 cubic feet of gas last month, upon which they paid a revenue tax of $1,062 52.
 One of the young leopards of Robinson's menagerie escaped from its cage yesterday afternoon, and on being recaptured severely bit one of the attendants in the leg.
 Engine No. 60, on the Indianapolis and St.
 Louis Railroad, took out, yesterday morning, a train of sixty-four loaded cars, which was the largest and heaviest train ever pulled out of the city.
 Posters announcing the opening of Burt & by some maiden ladies residing near by. It is a girl and apparently about four months old.

 Its pedigree is unknown.

We learn from Mr. J. M. Tiltford, who visited Cambridge City yesterday, that his niece, Miss Wilson, who so narrowly escaped death at the burning of Oxford College, is as comfortable as could be expected considering her very severe injuries, and is in a fair way to recover fully, under the careful nursing of her aunt, Miss Coyner. She received an ugly cut under the chin, about two inches long and penetrating the bone, and was seriously injured internally. She was removed from Oxford to Cambridge City on a hammock, and will be brought to this city as soon as her condition will allow—probably in the course of a week.

No business firm in the city has made more rapid strides in winning the good will and confidence of the public than has Craft & Cutler, dealers in watches, jewelry and silverware. Their store, No. 24 East Washington street, is one of the handsomely arranged and finished in the city. Their stock of goods is from the very best manufacturers, it has been selected with excellent judgment, and comprises everything that can be mentioned or thought of in their line. Their sincere endeavors to meet all the requirements of their patrons, their reasonable prices and the superior cast of their goods has rendered their beautiful store a very general resort. See their new goods now opening.

whole community. Of the hundreds, and thousands, whose rockers crashed and grated the river pebbles in 1850, from Red Mountain to Indian Ball, Balty and Gotham now alone remained.

Miners' law in 1850 gave thirty feet front to the man. Miners' law in 1865 was whatever Balty and Gotham chose to make it. In 1860 it concerned thousands; in 1865, hundreds; in 1865, two—Balty and Gotham. Vox populi, vox dei.

Out of the bag-end of the flat, out of a light, ethereal and, mixed with irregularly shaped quick boulders, Balty panned a "two-bit prospect." Two, sober, hard-working men living near by, whose lives were patterns of order and neatness; whose cabin was a marvel of man's housekeeping; whose bread was the lightest on the river, but who for years had never been able to strike a speck of thing better than a "two dollar per-day claim" (Balty, in scorn, called such "grub-and-whisky digging") made him a liberal offer for four hundred feet of his ground.
 Balty never prospected another pan from that "kough" in the bank. He was in want of cash, he was ever thus. He owned much and indefinitely ground ground ground he kept the offer. That "kough" proved the only paydirt in the claim. Balty's golden instincts almost told him not to prospect salable ground too much. Leave well enough alone. When a prospect-hole develops too late, it is never in status quo. Leave it with the biggest berries on the top of the basket, as does the fruit dealer.

Balty accumulated stores of whisky in his cabin. He stayed by it, and pursued an industrious life of inebriation. When Hawkins—once a lively camp of eight hundred souls—was reduced to its last house and its two last residents; when the traveler on some still hot summer's day, passed through hearing only the ceaseless roar of the river over the rifle, seeing only in imagination the life and excitement of 1850, he might then be residents in tones of joyful inebriation.

This would be Balty, arrived at the afternoon stage of his cups, when he was desirous of fraternizing with everybody.
 When the domestic whisky was exhausted; when the Chinese in the vicinity would no longer hospitably offer their tea-bowls of "brandy," Balty, half crazed with thirst, stimulant, would go home, discipline by degrees his stomach to its natural food, and restore, day by day, the steadiness of his nerves.
 In a week he was at work. In a few months, some overlooked spot in the flat, or bar, some hollowed-out rock, or some which, and fine "drift wood" had been steadily accumulating "panned out" richly for Balty; and industry and sobriety stood by again and cursed.

Balty was the principal owner in the General Scott, river bed claim. None save he and Gotham lived near, who, twelve years before, had been the principal owners in the river bed claim. Balty had long waited this chance to work this ground. Year after year the Franklin Pierce claim, just below, put up their dam, "choking water" over the General Scott river. At last, the Franklin Pierce was "worked out." The General Scott could now "go in." They did so. Fifteen years before, the General Scott company numbered a dozen persons. One by one they dropped off. Hawkins' bar dwindled from forty houses to twenty, from twenty to ten, and from ten to five, were left. They now constituted the General Scott Company.

At the end of the season, when the river rose, Balty stood upon his bank, $5,000 the richer man. Phoenix and Pike, hearing of Balty's luck, again cursed the undisciplined brutes who had once and forever beyond the spell of Chinese camp, Sonora anticipated. All were disappointed. Balty said he was going east. Everybody in secret laughed. As soon should Table mountain slip its moorings, and go to San Francisco.
 But Balty was in earnest. He bought a new outfit, and he bought a new outfit.
 He opened his eyes. Balty had certain ideas as to the style in which opulence should travel. He dashed around the country for a few days.
 Every grocery received a new financial impetus. People wondered how soon the team would be away, and the highway become a wreck. They wondered and waited in vain.
 Balty, after courtesying about Touloume for a fortnight, suddenly dashed off at a tangent—gold, mustangs, buggy and all. The establishment was never seen or heard of after.
 Balty was invisible two months and two weeks. At the end of that period he dropped down again at Hawkins' bar, without a cent and the two bottles tied together by a string—one full the other empty. Receipts in full. He had been east. He had seen his native city.
 He was back. Balty was back. Balty was years not able to get farther than twenty miles from Hawkins'—should weather all the temptations of San Francisco, and go on board the steamer with a sound skin, and a comparatively sound purse, as he did. But the mare of a miracle was that he had saved money to buy a return-ticket. Community had not given him enough credit for forethought. Balty knew that he was to square that five thousand east; so he planned not only to keep his communications open, "in case of a miracle," but he planned to pay the way to Stockton, he had paid even the stage fare, lodgings, and meals for the return-trip, two months and two weeks in advance.

Beyond the mere fact that Balty had been to the States, the sparse population on the river were not much wiser. He rambled vaguely as times about any trip between New York and Philadelphia, and a "lady." Gotham had intrusted him with messages for a mother and brother. Gotham regarded their proper delivery, being dependent on Balty, in the light of a forlorn hope. But matters but little to him whether the messages were delivered or not. He was a man direct from the river to the States. Balty might make good his promised connections. A few stranger things had happened. Balty promised. Gotham received these promises in silence. He knew Balty could and would promise.

A few months after Gotham received a letter from his brother. "I saw your friend Balty," it read. "He did not seem quite himself."
 "It is easy enough to know how it was with Balty," said Gotham, speaking confidentially on the subject. "He met Mac in Philadelphia.
 Mac was a 'spend' here in Indiana. He Mac says to himself: Here—Balty will rid himself of his cash as fast as he can. If I don't get some of it, some one else will! And so, I guess, they worked Balty's head out as quick as they could, and whizzed him back again to California."

Balty is now working in Donasticks gulch.
 He has struck nothing for eighteen months.
 He knows he must, soon. It has been ordined that he shall unearth a certain amount of virgin gold before he dies. Destiny sent him to the Touloume river for that purpose. It matters but little to him whether the messages be near together or far apart. He was "born to develop, not to retain wealth. He fully realizes this. It is that which impulsely him doggedly, solidly, to work on. Of what use to him to speculate, or enter on any legitimate business? Once he struck out and invested in hog; bought a mother with a large litter; he saw himself, in fancy a large hog drover, and the whole surrounding country covered with his stock. His hogs brought only trouble; they broke into the miners' cabins, and ate their provisions; broke, barking in Dutch ovens by the door-fires—men being at work on their claims—polluted by them; infuriated sufferers clamored at Balty's cabin for redress. His hogs disturbed his own rest during frosty nights; they slept in a pile at his door; the inside pile was warm; the outside cold; the external pig refused not to remain so. There was the last night, a steady squal, grunt and straggle.
 Balty, at last, became disgusted with the pig business. He sold out; the money was quickly put in circulation; that was Balty's mission. He saw clearly; he sees it now clearer; he sees it more clearly; he is not for himself to accumulate wealth; he is merely a man in the hands of ghostly gold seekers, to find gold, dig it, and keep up the metallic bases of our currency.

BALTY.
 [From the Overland Monthly.] Balty came with the rest to Hawkins' in 1850. Hawkins had proved Balty's local distinct. For sixteen years he tried to reach Sonora, only twenty miles distant. Chinese camp lay seven miles away. Chinese proved for Balty an impassable barrier. There, he Phoenix produced the black bottle; Pike, a glass decanter—resembling a drinker for Balty. He always stayed at Chinese. Chinese proved Balty's Delilah. There was he regularly shorn of his dust, his sobriety, his resolutions. Time after time did he leave the river, resolved to be a man, to be strong, to professance, and he had promised himself until he reached Sonora. Time after time did he fail, retreating back to Hawkins, his buckskin purse depleted of its last grain, and bearing his receipt in full for dust deposited in various exchequers at Chinese, in the shape of two black bottles tied together by a string.

In 1865, there happened to Balty one of those events of a moment which decide and turn a man's whole future career. Coming as usual, to Chinese from Hawkins on a hired horse, the animal ran away with him, carrying him, and he was left a foot on the ground, and up the road toward Sonora. Balty kept on, and accomplished the trip.

It is often thus. We spend an existence in endeavoring to accomplish an aim, to solve a problem; and when, at last, we give it up, accident takes hold, and a flash carries us straight to the point. Balty tried for sixteen years to reach Sonora. The man failed. The horse won.

Sonora was benefited. Balty always had dust when he visited camp. Most of it went sooner or later into the saloon-keepers' till.
 True, he purchased some provisions. His verbal order for a wister's supply once ran thus:
 "I guess, Jones, you may bring me a sack of flour, ten pounds of pork, ten pounds of tobacco, and a barrel of whisky."

Phoenix and Pike saloon keepers never in their hearts forgave the man who walked to the mountains which carried him beyond the charmed circle of Chinese. He never renewed his allegiance there. "It was a clear loss at least of a thousand dollars yearly to the camp."

There seemed a mysterious affinity between this man and gold. He was sure to strike somewhere in his range of the river and bank-diggings a rich deposit once in two years.
 People at last grew to have faith in Balty's luck, and trusted him by reason of that faith.
 Balty was lucky; while honest, sober, but pen-niless industry stood by and cursed.

Apart from the search for gold, Balty was dull, uninteresting, even stupid. On the trail after a lead he brightened up. All sense and keenness seemed poured through that channel.
 The rest were dry. Something led him under the place of the flat where lay a "dollar prospect." Industry and sobriety sank their shafts through foot after foot of "hard pan" and barren gravel. On the ledge, industry and sobriety found half-a-cent-to-the-pan prospect, "fine-flour gold." Fine-flour gold will cover your pan's bottom with a "thousand colors"—so that the glass is needed to reveal them; but in weight, they are as the dust on the butterfly's wing.

There was Crane flat. For years, the river and bank yielding richly, it had been overlooked. But Balty had ever kept an eye on it.
 A ragged scrawl on a certain live-oak informed the public that—
 "We, the undersigned, claim this ground, and are going to work the same as soon as we have a chance. Balty, Gotham."

Such a notice was neither legal nor definite.
 It was not desired that it should be. Old settlers like Balty and Gotham felt that there was a certain right of property in the whole area had so long lived.

Miners' law required of them to state how many feet they claimed. This was what Balty and Gotham did not wish to do. Their claim was indefinite. It overshadowed the whole flat. A stranger might come along and "jump" a portion; but in so doing, he would incur a dangerous unpopularity with the whole community. Balty and Gotham constituted the Miners' Reporting Itself.

 [From Old and New.] Generations of men are the real chapters of history. Give thirty years, so that the men of the last generation have for the most part gone by, and the men of the new generation are well on in the middle of the century. Before the footlights, and you invariably find that the men of the past are working doing the work of their fathers' apples, or undoing it, as the case may be. You find that they are determined to "see the folly of it for themselves," as much as the girls are who wish to be free from the balls of which their mothers are tired. We find for instance, in this country, a very "timid" agreement and solution of the relations between eight republics of the North and five oligarchies of the South, in the adoption of the Federal Constitution. One generation drifted by. In 1819 the whole thing was to be done over again, and after a year and a half of contest, was adjusted "forever" again by the Missouri compromise.
 "Forever" lasted, as usual, for just a generation; and, with a new set of men upon the stage, this compromise had to be flung to the winds, the whole subject to be opened up again, and the new generation to work out this problem as best it may.

Our relations with England follow just the same law. In 1783 the treaty of peace was made, which was finally ratified on the 20th of January, 1783. At the end of thirty years the two countries went to war again, kept at war for two years, and on the 24th of December, 1814, made peace in the treaty of Ghent.
 Thirty years more found a new pile of bones of contest, a new set of sacrifices, kept up by little men; all two great men, Sir Robert Peel and Daniel Webster, devised and agreed on a remedy for the worst of them in a high commission, and the great treaty of peace of 1843 was signed. Another generation has gone by, and Sir Robert Peel and Daniel Webster have been dead. Another set of quarrels has grown up between the countries; and so the high commission of the new generation of both powers is sitting at Washington to adjust, let us hope for thirty years more, a series of questions most of which did not come into the view of Lord Ashburton or Mr. Webster.

A Brazilian Breakfast.
 A correspondent of the Boston Journal writes from Bahia: Starting on our journey, we sped on out of the old city, across a handsome iron bridge which spans the river to the more modern town; then came the more open country, with its suburban houses, gardens, palm groves, its wide, tree-lined avenues, its half-naked adults and wholly naked children, and its rough roads. We pulled up at the gate of a gentleman known to one of the party. He inquired for the master; for the mistress. Neither were at home, but we were all urgently bidden to enter. Our friend, who had been expected to make our acquaintance at home, was told seats in a delightfully cool parlor, with marble floor, and opening out on three sides, under verandas twelve or fifteen feet wide, paved with tile and seeming after our warm ride like a Brazilian paradise. We heard the clink of glasses, and lo! the next moment a gracious salaam, ushered us out to a refectory of fruits and all manner of beverages, with lemons and sugar to match. "This," said the guide, philosopher, and friend, "is Brazilian hospitality. One may journey all over Brazil and never be so warmly welcomed as here. And board anywhere in the country, not a loaf at the grounds, where we found the best fruits growing in great profusion—oranges rich and ripe, like apples in a farmer's orchard, for abundance, bananas by the hundred, cocoanut and breadfruit, mangoes, and dozens of others, the names of which I know not—brought us visit to a close at that place. But stepping across the street, we entered the highly cultivated grounds of another Brazilian, whose servant met and conducted us about the premises, the principal attraction in which is the rarest of flowers, the half-naked adults

UNITED STATES DISTRICT—No. 1,231. In the matter of William Carrier. Contest of creditors' petition in bankruptcy in hearing before Judge Graham in chambers. The evidence in the case will occupy two more days in hearing.

The grand and petit jurors for the May term were drawn yesterday.

SUPERIOR—Room 1—No. 8. William Harbalt vs. Nelson McCoy et al. Damages for false imprisonment. Set for trial to-morrow morning. Nothing done to-day in any of the rooms.

CRIMINAL CIRCUIT—Opened and adjourned until to-morrow morning, when the Ben Johnson case will probably be taken up for retrial.

CIVIL CIRCUIT—Evening session. The Hall case still occupies the attention of the Court.

Morning session—The Out-McKernan trial continues. City—J. W. Label, the chronic old gazer, was ordered to leave the city and State last Friday. He was up for vagrancy, and his vagrancy was entered, and a fine of $20.15 imposed, with thirty days in the City Prison.

George Haverman plead guilty to a charge of drunken and disorderly conduct; paid $1.20 upon his assessment, and was allowed to leave town without further punishment.

Thomas Swan paid his fine for being drunk and disorderly.

Burglaries.

It has just been made public that last Thursday, between ten and twelve o'clock a. m., a burglar or burglars effected an entrance to the residence of Rev. Amos Hanaway, on Massachusetts avenue, just above St. Clair, and appropriated a valuable pocket book containing about twelve dollars, a pair of gold sleeve buttons and other articles of value. A gold watch lay near the pocket book, in a case, but the scamps missed it, thinking it a picture probably. In the kitchen they helped themselves to such pastry as suited their tastes, then taking the shovel, tongs, broom, etc., piled them up on the floor, evidently to make the occupants believe children had been there.

Then again, on Sunday evening last, while the family were at church, the same house was burglarized again, and completely ransacked from top to bottom, even the beds not escaping the search for valuables. The thieves this time took between two and three dollars in money, and several articles of different values. On each occasion a portion of the money taken belonged to the Massachusetts Avenue M. E. Church Sabbath School, of which the reverend gentleman is pastor and treasurer. Such an outrage should be looked after pretty sharply by the police.

Supposed Death from a Husband's Cruel Treatment.

At about noon on Sunday last an Irish woman, residing with her husband, a drunken brute, at the corner of Merrill and Duncan streets, died after having given birth to a dead child on the Friday before. It is claimed that her death was caused by the brutal treatment of her husband, who is known to have shamefully misused her, both on Thursday and Friday of last week. Monday morning the corpse was taken to Madison by two sisters of the deceased, the husband refusing to accompany it. He remained at home selling the furniture of the house, which he finished by noon and has not been seen since. The case was so suspicious that the Grand Jury have taken it under advisement, and are now engaged in working it up. Up to noon to-day nothing that we could learn had been heard of or from him.

The Missing Girl.

The News last evening mentioned the fact that a daughter of Henry Weghorst had probably been abducted by a strange woman who was allowed to rest night before last under Mr. W.'s roof. It has since been ascertained that the woman, who bears a remarkable resemblance to one Ra. Rote, recently released from the Martin county jail, had coaxed the girl on board a Cincinnati train yesterday, and the two had left the city, but for what point remains a mystery. The parents are in agony regarding the whereabouts of their child. The girl, whose name is Louisa, is but eleven years of age, and is described as being four feet high, light hair, blue eyes, fair complexion, and well developed for a girl of her age. She was clothed in a dark dress, with white trimmings, white stockings, low shoes, black hat and feather, blue ribbon around the edge, and light striped shawl. Up to noon to-day no intelligence of the missing girl had been received at police headquarters.

OWN Sidney Manning was caught in the act of trying to pick the pocket of Mrs. John Duncan at the circus yesterday afternoon, and arrested by Officers Keefe and Travis. At the City Court this morning Manning was charged with vagrancy, and the trial set for Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Meanwhile, he remains in the station house.

CAPTAIN WIGHTMAN, who recently leased the old McKing House on Illinois street, has had it handsomely repainted and papered throughout. The saloon formerly in the building has been blotted out, and in its place now is the Wightman House dining hall. The hotel now presents a fine appearance.

Real Estate Transactions.

The Concert Last Evening.

Barely does the announcement of a concert in this city draw a more refined and intellectual audience than did that of the Mendelssohn Quintette Club last evening at Masonic Hall. Though not remarkably large it was a splendid and appreciative one, composed entirely of those who love genuine music. The programme was a fine one, the selections being entirely from heavy authors, and this is the only fault we can find with the entertainment.

It was too severely classical for a general audience. There was no relief whatever except that brought by Mrs. J. W. Weston, in the English ballad, "Who's at my Window," "The Swallow," and "The Merry, Merry Sunshine." These were well rendered, the fair singer taking possession of her listeners upon her first appearance. Her voice is sweet and musical, though not remarkably powerful. She must remain a great favorite among the masses.

Each particular performance of the instruments was so perfect in every respect that it is difficult to designate any one that was better than another. If there was a distinction it was in favor of a selection from the Posthumous Quartette in D Minor, by Schubert. This was the finest effort of the evening. The Austrian National Hymn, "God Save the Emperor," a quartette from Haydn, was another gem. It is much to be regretted that this company, now in its twenty-second season, could not have been induced to remain another night at least. A full house could certainly have been secured.
